

There are many diverse missions and people on Nellis, everything from emergency room attendants, to pilots and security forces. All must do their jobs, on their feet and do it right. If you really want to know what the mission is on Nellis

Take a walk in someone else's shoes...

Above, the most popular low-quarter shoes on Nellis.

Above and right, the 99th Security Forces' two most common boots. Guess which one is easier to maintain?

(All photos by Staff Sgt. Jim Bianchi and Senior Airman Chris Flahive)

Above, the over-the-shoe booties used by the 99th Medical Group hospital.

Left and below, The 66th Rescue Squadron uses a variety of specialty shoes and boots for their missions. Left, Senior Airman Jeremy Johnston tries on a pair of extreme cold weather ski boots. Bottom left, the climbing boots. Below, the swim-fins. Center, a different style of extreme cold weather boot.

Below, as part of the fire-fighting ensemble, members of the 99th Civil Engineer Squadron's Fire Department, wear protective boots to keep their feet dry and cool.

Above, the 99th Communications Squadron uses metal gaffs that strap on to special, reinforced boots to help them climb telephone poles for cable maintenance.

The men and women of the 99th medical Group, depending on their jobs, can wear sneakers, white nurses shoes, clogs and sometimes surgical booties.

